Tone

On LinkedIn, posts are lengthened compared to other platforms to fit in with the preferred algorithm from the platform. Posts also include a list of topics from whatever is being promoted to give that audience an idea of what to expect. However, they fit into the current state because there isn't a per platform strategy. Whatever was going on Instagram went on LinkedIn.

- I. Professional and Insightful: Content is crafted to inform and educate audiences on complex topics within the tech landscape, providing actionable insights.
- II. Conversational and Relatable: Despite the technical nature of our services, we maintain a conversational tone using clear, jargon-free language occasionally incorporating humor or rhetorical questions to make posts more engaging.
- III. Human-Centric and Community-Oriented: We highlight our culture and community involvement, showcasing employee experiences and external/internal events.
- IV. Strategic and Value-Driven: Posts often address the strategic benefits of certain technologies or practices, focusing on how they can lead to improved efficiency, compliance, and competitiveness.
- V. Trends and Pop-culture: Connect our services and capabilities to trending memes and pop culture references making them easy to understand and get a point across.

Top performing content comes from the following pillars:

- I. Pillars
  - A. Thought Leadership
  - B. Advocacy
  - C. Recruiting

Key Takeaways

- Content Performance

- Posts that span multiple content pillars perform best overall
- Educate and Engage pillars, while not top 3 in volume, deliver strongest engagement rates
- Graphic carousels stand out as top-performing format, simplifying complex info while maximizing interactions

- Account Growth (YoY)

- Positive growth across most KPIs
- Shares are the one area that declined this is a key opportunity for improvement
- Growth in followers is less impactful than growth in visibility and senior-level engagement

- Strategic Shift: From Vanity to Value

- Followers ≠ Success... follower count is a vanity metric
- Real performance = Reach, Shares, and Page Visits filtered by seniority (e.g., VP & Exec level)

- Reach & Shares Work Together

- Shares expand reach by tapping into 2nd+ degree networks
- The more shareable the content, the more discoverable the brand
- Boosting shares will naturally support follower growth over time

New Proposed Strategy

Our Problem...

We're having trouble reaching and getting people to interact with our LinkedIn account from users outside Impact. We're looking to increase shares and reach and are looking to be more in front of ATLs (C-Suite and VPs) at ICP and Tier 1 companies.

Proposed approach...

Shift the primary focus from follower count to shareability and visibility among ideal prospects. Build a system that positions our content as:

- I. Worth sharing to internal and external teams
- II. Seen by decision-makers through second-degree exposure
- III. Trustworthy, visually digestible, and subtly authoritative
- IV. For engaging posts, this new strategy adds more value behind the engagement. It's who we're engaging and how they're engaging that is going to be different. Before we were just posting to get engagements overall.

ATL BUYER PERSONA: The Strategic Executive

- ❑ Misalignment between departments slows down strategic execution and ROI

New Content Pillars

Thought Leadership

To increase visibility among decision-makers, we're evolving our Thought Leadership pillar to prioritize shareable, strategic content that resonates with VPs and Owners (ATLs).

Our goal is to grow these demographics by at least 3% by EOY and increase reach by creating content that sparks conversation and second-degree exposure.

What we share

- Authority building content: create posts that show unique frameworks, strategic POVs, or proprietary insights.
- 'Executive Lens' Series: create a reoccurring that's "written for execs, by execs" with each one aligning to an industry concern
- Decision maker toolkits: posts that package insights into shareable, useful, and meeting-ready assets.

How we share

- Targeted employee resharing: curate specific posts and ask employees in sales, leadership, etc. to reshare them with prompts that frame it as useful to their network (posts should tag Impact).
- Tag and mirror ICP execs: research heavy, build off publicly posted content from VPs or owners. Craft carousel responses that add commentary, visualize their pain point, and offer a solution or unique lens.
- Thought leadership by proxy: encourage internal leaders to comment or post short thoughts on our higher performing posts.

Strategic Opportunity

- Tap into the networks of established B2B influencers—not TikTok stars, but respected experts in top-tier industries our ATLs identify with.

Objective

- Increase brand awareness and drive customer action through trusted voices.

Why It Matters

- 75% of B2B marketers in 2024 prioritized:
  - Social content
  - Live events (virtual & in-person)
  - Podcasts

This would be our BIG thing. It would differentiate us from the competition; we'll be steps ahead of them. By partnering with our current thought leaders (inside and outside of Impact), industry-recognized influencers, companies enhance their visibility and establish lasting connections with their target audiences. Besides, people would be hearing from a PERSON and not a BRAND.

New Content Pillars

Move on From Talking About Ourselves

If our priority on LinkedIn is to focus on ATL engagement, shares, and reach, then we must move away/limit posting about recruiting/us in general.

Reduce Advocacy pillar content drastically, and combine with Recruiting.

It doesn't serve our core visibility goal:

- Doesn't get shared by external audiences, especially not by ATLs at target companies.

It sends the wrong signal to the wrong audience:

- ATLs scrolling LN aren't concerned about job openings; they're looking for industry insights, peer opinions (thought leadership), and strategic trends. When our profile is filled with hiring or culture posts, it may signal that our brand is more focused on internal growth rather than external value.

It doesn't create the "domino effect" we're after:

- Recruiting posts are rarely saved or referenced in internal meetings, don't usually earn shares outside of employees, won't spark deeper engagement or position our team as a go-to resource.

Updated Content Pillar

Educate: Teach, Don't Sell

Establish Impact as a go-to resource by sharing insights that simplify complexity and equip decision-makers. The difference between the educate and thought leadership pillar is thought leadership is meant to influence and inspire high-level thinking. Educate is meant to simplify, explain, and equip decision-makers.

This works for multiple reasons:

- I. Helps decision makers form trust through repeated exposure to clarity and thoughtfulness
- II. High save/share value, useful resources feel like a “gift” to the audience
- III. Boosts reach by being used and reshared, not just read

Step-by-step carousels:

- how to rollout xyz, 3 tips for xyz

Quick visual explainers:

- what's the difference between xyz, turning blog content into videos (Blog reels)

Stats with context:

- xx% of execs still feel left behind on tech transformation.

“Teach the teacher” tools:

- Simplified diagrams, cheat sheets, or posts that middle managers can use to explain to their VPs or owners

Updated Content Pillar

Engage: Be Human, Be Memorable

VP and owners are human, too. They like what's clever, relatable, and real. The goal is to make them feel something, pause, reflect, maybe even share it with others.

In our B2B buyer survey, respondents described themselves as creative, funny, and smart. Their hobbies also include movies, tv shows, gaming, and sports. All of these resonate with the engage pillar and go to show that it should still be incorporated into our strategy.

This works for multiple reasons:

- I. Maximize reach and interactions
- II. Encourages comments and reactions, boosting visibility to second-degree networks
- III. Adds personality and memorability to brand among a sea of sameness for B2B companies

Relatable memes tied to hobbies

- aimed at exec pain points like tech overload and change management fatigue, etc. We'll be using the buyer survey and creating memes related to that.

Situational humor

- examples of common situations accompanied by memes representing the B2B survey hobby findings

Behind-the-scenes moments:

- Show experts prepping for a webinar, giving a talk, reacting to headlines, myth-busting videos

Cultural relevance with a twist

- Think about popular pop culture moments and how these can be reflected against the B2B survey and ATLs

Voice/Tone Guidelines

| Voice trait   | What it means                                                                           | Why it matters                                                              |
|---------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Authoritative | We are experts in what we talk about, and we back it up with proof, data, or frameworks | VPs and owners respect thought leaders who show vs. sell                    |
| Digestible    | Clear, structured, and skimmable. Short sentences paired with smart visuals             | Decision-makers are busy, complexity kills shares                           |
| Clever        | We use wit to make complex or dry topics more engaging                                  | Keeps scroll-stoppers like memes and relatable videos aligned with B2B tone |
| Personable    | Professional, but human. We speak with not at or to our audience                        | Builds connection and trust without sounding robotic or try-hard            |

Major difference:

- Shift from a playful tone across all platforms to one more suited for LinkedIn
  - Speaking confidently and clearly to decision-makers, while staying approachable and relevant enough for middle managers to share and teams to reference.

How to Deal With Social Requests

We receive many social post requests. Updates like location announcements, awards, and internal news aren't evergreen and aren't a fit for organic social. However, they're great for paid or targeted digital channels where they reach the right audience.

To streamline requests, we'll introduce a social media request form on Info Hub, reviewed monthly.

Here are some points for the form:

- Name, role
- Social post idea, any inspo, any caption idea
- Value: why would this post add value to our social strategy
- Space for adding relevant links or image/video upload as it relates to their post

Final Note

- To keep up with timeliness, LinkedIn plans should be done in agile methodology, 2-week sprints. EX: First 2 weeks of August done in the last 2 weeks of July. The last 2 weeks of August are done in the first 2 weeks of August.
  - This keeps us on top of trends and able to deliver things that are currently of value. One pain point we have is not being on top of industry trends since monthly plans are done in the first/second weeks of the previous month.
